The plan is based on a series of actions to increase access to vision services for people who are blind or partially sighted. The action plan sets out a programme of work to ensure that people who are blind or partially sighted and the organisations that support them receive access to vision services. At the moment, just over a third of people who are blind or partially sighted receive correct first fixational eye sight tests at the right time. For people who have low vision this figure is even lower, at just over a quarter. It also shows that the overall proportion of people who are considered to have access to "good" sight is 40 per cent, while 9 per cent have access to "good" vision in only one eye. Stuart Knight-Irwin, the Minister for Disabled People, said: "Access to good sight is an essential part of everyday life. People with low vision or who are blind or partially sighted are less able to access the sights and sounds of everyday life. "Our Government's Action Plan will give the Disability Action Unit and The Department for Work and Pensions the opportunity to help people who are blind or partially sighted to enjoy these important aspects of life. "I am greatly encouraged that the response from the private sector to the consultation has been so positive. "The businesses and organisations that respond to the plan are directly responsible for providing every man, woman and child with a good sight by 2020." The Implementation Plan is currently undergoing final consultation and will be launched in the summer. It will then be submitted to the Disability Action Unit to make sure it is implemented in the most appropriate and effective way. The action plan will launch the National Packages for Better Sight, which will be rolled out in six different areas, with a total budget of almost £30 million 1cb139a0ed
