If I pay $30, how much will I have to pay if I want to cover my debt? And what if I send $15 and ask for a credit for the next time? A: I would make them write a method that handles payments of amounts that are generally credited, and another for payments that are generally debited, and then set two variables, one for the total credit they have, the other for the amount that they still owe. Then make a loop that does: if (debt >= payment) credit += payment; else debt -= payment; for each payment they might make, and add one to the credit and subtract one from the debt. A: Let the initial (original) balance be $50. Let the payments be $x_1, x_2,... x_n$ and let the number of payments be $n$. Then we have the following congruence: $$50 \equiv x_1 + x_2 + \dots + x_n \pmod{n}$ There is a faster, easier, and more specific method called the Binary Coded Decimal (BCD) algorithm. The BCD algorithm is: compute the integer $i
