The GL10 converter is available in two variants: a single-switch version and a double-switch version. The single-switch version is certified for safety according to EN 45102 – Reliability of electrical and electronic products for use in hazardous environments and a class I protection rating. The double-switch version is certified according to AN/IEC 60576 – Minimally intrusive power supply for use in hazardous environments. In some applications of integrated circuit (IC) technology, an IC system is required to meet wide temperature range, ESD voltage, and ESD current specifications. The performance specifications are usually met by design techniques such as optimizing transistor structure, providing a good circuit layout, and/or adding ESD protection devices to the circuit. In addition, a power-on-reset (POR) circuit is often included in the IC system. The POR circuit provides a reset signal for preventing unwanted signals from being latched in the IC system

Q: How to authenticate users against mobile apps using firebase I have a mobile app which is having its own web server and running on cloud. If we have to authenticate users with the mobile app, then which data model need to be followed? If it is based on firebase authentication rules, then I need to maintain user table in firebase for keeping track of users, however to get their details I need to visit each mobile app and it is not a feasible approach, if the table is not maintained properly. I am curious to know is there any other data model/way in which authentication can be done, and also how to integrate firebase authentication with these data models. A: Firebase authentication rules can be used for all authentication scenarios supported by Firebase. However, the two cases which most commonly occur within this framework are User credentials are tied to the phone and password they provide User credentials are tied to the user (recall that email is not unique to a user) Suppressive effect of all-trans retinoic acid on the expression of beta-defensins and bone morphogenetic protein-2 in human gingival epithelial cells. All-trans retinoic acid (ATRA) is a biologically active metabolite of vitamin A that is known to induce differentiation and to inhibit proliferation of many human carcinomas, including oral squamous cell carcinoma. The present study investigated the effect of ATRA on the expression of defensins, a family of antimicrobial peptides, and on bone morphogenetic protein-2 (BMP-2), in human gingival epithelial (HGE) cells. ATRA significantly increased the mRNA levels of the beta-defensins hBD-1 and hBD-2, which were expressed in a dose-dependent manner. Although the induction of the hBDs was concentration-dependent, it reached a maximum at 50 nM ATRA. The protein expression levels of defensins were similar to those of the mRNAs. On the other hand, BMP-2 expression was downregulated by ATRA in HGE
