I'm using Python 3.7 and up. UPDATED 1: Changed my password and had to update online accounts. Received email and saw it. A: It was an issue with my email account. Changed the email account and it worked. `import requests api_key = "YOUR_API_KEY" r = requests.get("", params={ 'user': 'YOUR_USERNAME', 'password': 'YOUR_PASSWORD' }) if r.status_code == 302: print("LOGIN error") else: print("OK")` Q: How to implement methods without generation of package names? I have a weird issue that I have noticed I can't sort out. I'll give a few examples: `java.util.Scanner` is created from: `import java.util.*;` Not only that, but a lot of the methods are defined using: `public static class...` Where `public static class` is something like: `public static class Path { public static String concat(String lhs, String rhs) { // Implement etc } }` Where I don't want to put `public static class Path { ... }` I want to generate the actual method name instead. I have tried using `@generated-name`, but it doesn't seem to work. The issue I have is that it generates the full class (e.g. `java.util.Scanner`) and the method name, and I don't want that. I have tried `@immutable-s`. `public static class Path { @immutable public static String concat(String lhs, String rhs) { // Implement etc } }` It works but, if you come across the method in auto generated source it has 'immutable-s' as a prefix in the method name so you can't just remove that prefix by using `@immutable` without getting an error. I have also tried: `public static abstract class Path { 3e33713323`
