Its purpose is to remove the foreskin, thus creating a more aesthetically pleasing, surgically clean interior end of the penis. This procedure is performed in a variety of ways and by numerous medical professionals. These procedures are either performed surgically or medically by physicians or surgeons. Preferably, a physician or surgeon should provide a child the circumcision experience in the most beneficial manner and in accordance with medical procedures and custom. The preferred circumcision procedure for most families is the traditional medical circumcision or “snip” which is usually performed in an office setting by a physician. In a snip, a two-inch long rectangular piece of skin with a centrally located vascular bundle is removed from the child's foreskin. The surgical incision can be made in a number of ways, and is preferably accomplished without “unnecessary snipping” to save time and discomfort for the child. Traditional (medical) circumcision can be a painful and traumatic procedure for many children. Perhaps the single most important component of circumcision of a child is the proper procedure chosen for the circumcision. There are essentially two different procedures, or methodologies, that are employed to remove the foreskin from the penis of a young child. The first method entails making a surgical incision on the penis of a young boy or girl, and then cutting the foreskin free from the shaft of the penis. This particular procedure is considered the “surgical” approach to circumcision. There are other methods of foreskin removal that can also be accomplished surgically, such as freezing the skin of the penis with liquid nitrogen, cutting the foreskin free from the shaft of the penis with a knife or scalpel, excising the foreskin with a
