Sometimes, you'll be trying to level up a little character during your quest, but some of the default animations will be using the morph animation. If you choose a different animation, the levelup sequence can still be recorded and displayed, but is there a way to skip the morph animation? I know that you can right click the character to stop the morph animation manually, but it is usually a pain in the ass if you don't know that you are doing it. A: You can add a custom anim to the quest chain, and have that chain use the custom animations, like so: Selective effect of colchicine on the mobility of connective tissue in the rat skin. The skin was found to release both soluble and insoluble fractions, after its incubation in a phosphate buffer, in the presence of colchicine. Colchicine decreases the density of the collagenous connective tissue, mainly, in the bundles of the "mosaic" type. The elastic fibres are the major constituent of the connective tissue of these bundles. A decrease in the density of the "mosaic" collagenous connective tissue does not seem to affect the quantity of the elastic fibres. The connective tissue of the bundles of the "striation" type, which is the major fraction of the connective tissue in the skin, and in which there is a lot of collagenous fibres mixed with elastin and 3da54e8ca3
