Ask HN: what is the "money factor"? - sw007 i'm not looking for google, or iphone apps, i'm working on a product that relies on word of mouth so i can't really get any funding. is there a way i can get users to spread the word for me?ps if you get this far, i'm at: ===== mixmax It's interesting that people keep asking this question here, but very few seem to be getting it right. A product does not need funding to be built. Funding just makes it more likely that it will succeed. There are two ways to build a product, the first is to sell your users to another company, or partner, or whatever you call it. The second way is to create something. The hard part is usually finding the second way, which is where you can take funding. It's relatively easy to sell users to a company, but very hard to create something. But yes, your problem is somewhat general. The answer is to find what solves that problem of yours, in a way that is sustainable. Building a business from scratch without a market is the risky one. A good place to start is the site where you have the problem. If your product uses webcams and facial recognition that sucks, but if your product is based on that it might be interesting. ~~~ gcv I'm not so sure. A company can be sold to another company, but the company that creates the product is still important. The product doesn't get sold, it gets "pushed" to the users -- via advertising or otherwise. The same thing happens when you buy a car: You are not selling the car, you are getting someone else to sell it to the customer. ----- jlees I like these suggestions: Launch it. Get users, and you don't need funding for that. Get funding. You'll be able to afford to build great products with that. ----- Jasber Have you tried selling it? Create a landing page and find someone who will write a review for you. They'll help get it out there and can get you some traction. ----- netcan Only money matters if you want it to.
