November 12, 2009 Now You Know I always assumed there was a guidebook for New Orleans restaurants. Something like one of those old travel guides with the concise little paragraphs listing helpful, pertinent information, like: There are plenty of jazz clubs in Uptown. Once you know what they are, you can find them. There are plenty of good seafood restaurants on the lake front. Once you know what kind of seafood you're after, you can find them. Clearly there are thousands of interesting restaurants throughout the city and the metro area. I'm sure I could find the 20 most important by reading the online guide thingy at guidebooks.com. But I'm not going to. I could make a list of the best New Orleans restaurants that I know of and you could make one of the worst. Then we'd just argue about it. There are some really great restaurants that I've never even been to. I can see some of them (McGee's Steakhouse? The Hangout?). I'd like to go to some of them. I'd like to go to some of them right now. But I have no idea where they are. If the database was easier to use, I'd probably have found them. Thing is, you can't tell by looking at a restaurant that what's good or bad, cool or lame. Sure, many a great restaurant looks cheesy. The chefs at the city's top restaurants don't need a suit and tie to look awesome. Some restaurants look like they barely turned on the lights. You can tell a lot from the surroundings. But nothing is as good as a friend's recommendation. Or a restaurant recommendation form. Some restaurant writers are great at describing the food. Some write like it's hard to find a parking space at 5 p.m. (Seriously, it is hard to find a parking space on a Tuesday night at 5 p.m. in Uptown New Orleans). The New Orleans dining scene is a vast pool of talent and recipe development. I can't tell.

It's been effective in the past. And, you know, we're in a very different world than we were in the year 2000." — Rahm Emanuel, White House Chief of Staff and former Obama for America chief of staff, July 23, 2015 And here is a link to my interview with Emanuel on Sunday, four days before he made the statement quoted above. We seem to be in a very different world than we were in 2015. In the year 2000, the GOP was accusing Bill Clinton of having committed a crime which in the end was not even proven to have occurred — possibly the only time in history that the Republicans might have been right and the Democrats wrong. But in 2015, the Republicans are accusing the President of having committed a crime which has been proven to have occurred — and as a result are likely to be right and the Democrats wrong. The only thing which may have changed is the scale of the accusation. In the last decade, the GOP has compared Obama to Adolph Hitler on a regular basis and has accused him of being a Muslim socialist. Obama has compared the GOP to the KKK on a regular basis and has accused them of being a tea party extremist who are racists, advocates of a biblical theocracy, and who 3e33713323
