Hard Capacity Limits You might also see limits to data size, dimensions, etc. for the various types of data you are importing. Importing Data EViews doesn't require you to input data directly into the database. In fact, EViews is designed to work with databases that are not in the EViews. If you don't have a database of your own in EViews, you don't need to buy the EViews database. You can use the 'Get a copy of the EViews database' button to obtain a copy of the current database. You can also export data to an external spreadsheet program. You can do this in several ways. First, you can Export the entire database to the local database, or you can Export a single file of a specific data type to a spreadsheet. You can also export data from the 'Refresh' or 'Update' menu items and other buttons available throughout the EViews Interface. EViews desktop menus offer similar options to those available for the EViews Portable. EViews Entities Entity descriptions and fields are highly useful for databases that contain a large number of records. To learn more about EViews entities, use the 'EViews Entities' and 'What's a Entity' . External Import You can use the EViews Import wizard to import spreadsheet files and the data from a desktop database file. You can choose to import from Excel (.xls) files using the Windows version of this program and from any Windows database (.mdb) using the EViews data file version. 'Insert import' (EViews Lite only) enables you to import directly from a chosen spreadsheet or database file. Importing Data You can Import data from an Excel (.xls) file directly into an EViews file, and from a chosen spreadsheet (.xls) file directly into a database, or from a database directly into a chosen spreadsheet file. You can import from a desktop database or the data file version (via the EViews Portable or Lite version) of an EViews database file. Portable Data Viewer You can run the EViews Portable version of EViews on a flash memory disk instead of a physical computer. Once you export data to an EViews Portable, the data is available to you until you decide to export it to a PC. Import data to EViews You can import data into EViews
