“The new game engine is a true leap forward for the series,” said Pete Davidson, FIFA producer at EA Sports. “We’ve done a lot of testing to make sure that the player animations are as true to life as possible, and we are confident that we’ve achieved the most realistic and fluid gameplay on the PlayStation 4.” He continued, “To develop new game engine technology and be able to deliver the gameplay innovations we’ve envisioned in FIFA 20 is a great milestone, and we have a lot of exciting details to share in the coming months.” Gameplay has also been given an overhaul and has been improved through the use of a new game engine, “The Frostbite Engine.” “The Frostbite Engine allows us to deliver unprecedented levels of visual fidelity, while also delivering the high performance required to power this new level of gameplay,” Davidson said. “This is something we have been working on since FIFA 19, and is a true testament to the power of the Frostbite Engine.” To compliment the improvements to gameplay, both teams and players have been given a more accurate representation. “FIFA 20 gave players an amazing team-mate experience where they could see who they were playing next to on the pitch,” explained Eric Fossati, gameplay director. “We can now introduce some of the new characters from the NFL, NBA and NHL for the first time.” “There have been some character licensing changes, as well as visual enhancements for the players,” added David Lee, AI programmer. “We’ve also introduced new faces that help to bring more authentic player personalities to the game,” Rosters for the new characters are now locked, and the excitement begins in preseason this August. “We have 12 different stadiums that contain nine new leagues to join the MLS, NWSL, USL, La Liga, Bundesliga, EPL, Serie A, Ligue 1 and the Championship.” In addition, players will now be able to play with a wide array of new player archetypes to further enhance the game’s authenticity. There are now 11 player archetypes on the pitch with all 34
