Examples of the AI have been enhanced using this technology to make them react in more intelligent ways and give them more personality, making them even more realistic than in previous games. AI movements can be seen and felt in the improved sense of control and improved handling. A new, intelligent defender has been introduced, with new AI behaviours at set-pieces, in open play and in general playing style. There are more intelligent player reactions to taking shots and more defensive readjustments. The AI can play differently based on the opposition and match situation, using variations in its play to keep the flow of the game constant and avoid boring play. At set pieces, the opposition may take the ball from the goalkeeper; the goalkeeper may dive and push a free-kick towards goal; or a goalkeeper may come off his line and make a second attempt at a save. The new defensive AI has improved defensive reading of when to step up to the ball, meaning the AI will now stay closer to the ball and make fewer challenges in the remaining challenges it receives.

The system will also recognise what the opposition are doing and make smarter decisions as to where and when to press; for example, the AI will “fence” the ball to the nearest opponent and press even if its in a better position to attack. At free kicks, the goalkeeper can engage in a long contest for possession and has the option to kick it into the penalty area, or send the free-kick over the wall.

The AI goalkeeper is more likely to kick the ball away than previously. If the ball is kicked into the penalty area, the goalkeeper can follow it in to kick it away or attempt to make a clearance. If a goal is scored, or a player takes an intelligent risk to score, the AI will factor in this and react accordingly, keeping the flow of the game steady.
