Even if you only have a little cash, these apps are certain to come in handy. With the touch of a button, you can make your own voice-activated app, control your music playback and turn on your TV or your lights with one single tap. Even if you live by yourself, finding your way through your phone's menus can be tough. The apps featured in this article are not meant to replace the built-in functions of your smartphone. Instead, they are meant to complete your phone's features by adding a new level of convenience and efficiency in everyday life. Here you'll find free and paid apps to add some extra functions to your smartphone. 1. The Talking Dictionary If you find yourself holding your phone all the time, you may want to give some of its functions to your smartwatch. You can turn your smartphone into a wireless voice-activated speaker, a voice-activated assistant or even a photo frame with the Talking Dictionary. This is an app that will change the way you use your smartphone. The Talking Dictionary features an intelligent search engine that uses your smartphone's microphone to learn your voice and then work its magic. Once you have spoken, the app analyzes your command and connects you to information either through texts, audio, videos or even pictures. 2. VoiceReminder If you always forget where you put your smartphone, the VoiceReminder app will come in handy. It will remind you, before you wake up in the morning, when you left your phone so you do not end up making a fool of yourself. The mobile app also lets you schedule reminders so you can say �
