May 2020 Spotify Crackdown: Spotify has blocked 50 million free accounts May 2019 Spotify has blocked 50 million free accounts. The flaw is likely to have caused users to miss out on millions of free hours of music. The May 2019 purge came after it found a simple but effective way to farm account details out of free users. Spotify today blocked 50 million user accounts, affecting almost half of all paying subscribers. The Spotify service showed a 'change of use' message when attempting to play tracks. The company's support team responded to 50 million free accounts by telling them their accounts were being shut down – and it didn't issue any warning about a possible shutdown. The block could have caused users to miss out on between 3.7million and 8.3million hours of music. Users are normally unable to play songs for free, but a free account can be created without having to pay for the service. It's not clear why Spotify didn't alert its 50 million users, or why 50 million accounts are being purged, but it's not the first time. In December, Spotify managed to block 70 million accounts in a single day. In March 2019, Spotify confirmed that roughly 40 million accounts had been blocked. The platform stopped giving users "free months" in July after it was reported that the company had kept personal data for years from people who logged in with a specific email address. Earlier this year, Spotify admitted an error after blocking roughly 6 million paying accounts. The company told the BBC it was taking a "significant" number of accounts off the platform, but didn't mention the exact number. "This was the result of an automated account action taken in error," a spokesman said at the time. The issue had nothing to do with the automatic account deactivation tool that launched in August, he added. Disclaimer The site donotprovide Any illegal Mp3 or video. And while the "code" icon is appearing fine. The "Compress" icon is being displayed as default icon. .input-icon { background-image: url(""), url(""); padding-right: 16px; -webkit-appearance: none; -moz-appearance: none; appearance: none; -ms-appearance: none; width:100%; box-sizing: border-box; } How do I fix this? A: There is a problem with the path you have defined in your CSS. If you look at the path it's not relative to the resource, rather it's a local path, meaning relative to your HTML/CSS file, something like: url('./../svg/text-icons/code-icon.svg'), path is not relative to your resource, rather it's relative to the HTML file itself. To fix the issue: Make sure that you have included your svg source. Make sure the path you defined in the CSS points to the resource
