This invention relates to torque transfer apparatus and more particularly to rotary torque transfer devices, including torque converters and CVT's, employing thrust washers of the type having a plurality of projections for preventing wedging, at least two of which have an axial aperture through them. U.S. Pat. No. 2,565,953 to H. H. Patzelt describes a thrust washer which has a plurality of axially aligned, forwardly and peripherally extending arcuate projections. Each projection has a relatively small flat circular portion, a central curved portion and a radial skirt portion. Each projection is arranged to be turned during the rolling motion of the thrust washer on the cam surface of the rotating sleeve. The patent also

Perioperative transcatheter arterial chemoembolization for hepatocellular carcinoma: comparing risks of death and major complications to conventional therapies. The optimal management for patients with hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) has not been established. Transcatheter arterial chemoembolization (TACE) is commonly applied. The study aimed to evaluate the safety and risk of death with perioperative TACE compared with conventional therapies. Three groups were compared: group A consisted of patients treated with perioperative TACE and resection; group B consisted of patients treated with perioperative TACE only; and group C consisted of patients treated with resection only. The study also compared long-term outcomes. A total of 442 patients were identified. The mortality and major
