Learn about cellular biology with this interactive and challenging virtual reality experience. Users can build cells by arranging their organelles, which are cells' genetic packages. If they want to learn about specialized cells, they can transform their creations into e. coli bacteria and red blood cells. The viewer can either watch their creations grow in real-time, or pause and take "snapshots" of their cells while on the clock. Finally, after participants have built 10 cells, they can pause the simulation, and change their cells into red blood cells and e. coli bacteria. They will be able to observe and interact with their microbes in a variety of ways, such as: learn how to pump oxygen using special molecular complexes; view how the cells use energy from food and how the proteins in their cell wall help to generate special molecules; and even listen to human voices. A few fun facts: Cells can be grown in the high-tech nano-mats and the nano-mats are grown in biological reactors Cells have DNA, RNA, many specialized proteins, and organelles Labs have samples of cells from many different tissue and cells All models included on this 3D Vizzler are the genuine models in labs all over the world Lab classifications are: primary, secondary, and tertiary About Me: Nikki S. is a biology teacher that uses interactive virtual reality simulations to help her students explore new concepts in biology, as well as develop their critical thinking skills. She believes that the best way to teach an unfamiliar subject is to get students involved in the learning, and also to help them experience the subject matter. This virtual reality experience was created with the popular open source 3D Virtual Reality platform, Vizzler. Recent blog posts: Tertiary Tissue Interactive Lab for Tissue Formation Student Simulation Interactive Lab for Cell Formation This was an experience created to help students understand the cells in their bodies, and the role that all those cells play. While virtual reality (VR) simulations have long been utilized in science education, I was inspired to create my own after learning about the concept of co-presence. This concept is intended to create an immersive virtual experience for learners that has a high level of immersion, in order to create a sense of being there. It helps learners to focus on the senses, instead of relying on their eyes alone. Using VR combined with 3D objects and animation allows learners to be immersed in a new world where

What's new in The Dead Prince:

of Hama A Message of Hope to the World (1933) by Yusuf Ziyadah One of the messages of Islam in its teaching, practice, and lifestyle may be summed up as: in this world, a total reliance on God is the only means to success and happiness. But Islām also teaches us that the product of such reliance is justness: Islām calls for justice and wants to help humanity in terms of creating an environment in which justice is common for all. Clement of Alexandria (200-251, in Maqāmāt, xxi. 12) wrote that the first thing to be sought in administering just and reasonable laws is the life of the citizens. He is in favor of freedom of spirit, because he believes that if people are protected from harm, the best part of their mind will be used in seeking understanding and helping others. This belief in justice cannot be applied as long as there is more of one kind of life than of another. Islām is the remedy for this. In Islām, man is made to understand and know that every life has its own way, quality, worth, value, and destiny. The Qur'ānic word Hāqim in the Qur'ānic expression: "We have made the Qur'ānic proofs (of Truth) such that they are better guides to Him for those who believe" means "those who are able to understand" (2:39), and the Qur'ānic phrase: "We have made permissible, according to God's favor, the religion of Iman, or faith, and the adherence to that Faith in which you was sent if you are able to understand" (5:2). The word Muslim is a person who has adopted Hāqim in terms of the Truth of the Qur'ān. This "finding proof" in the Qur'ān among His verses is called "accepting Hāqim", which is commanded in the verses: "They ask you about the Book before making any (statement) to you. Say, 'The (Torah) was sent down for a noble purpose; and whatsoever is transmitted in it (revealed by God), such as the basic guides to Injeel and clear proofs, has been made clear for you.'" ❖
