Download OS X Lion Here..Q: Navigate a website using intent (browser) and download a file via ACTION_VIEW I'm trying to build an application that will download a file from a website. I'm currently using an intent to navigate to that website, but all I am doing is opening a browser and not viewing the website. How can I navigate the website instead of just opening a new web page? And, how can I download a file from that website? Here is the code I'm currently using (it gets the webpage from a string, and then displays it on the screen): private void openWebpage(String pageSource) { Intent browserIntent = new Intent(Intent.ACTION_VIEW, Uri.parse(""+pageSource)); startActivity(browserIntent); } A: To browse a website on Android, use these steps: Implement a WebViewClient and override shouldOverrideUrlLoading(). Use that to create a web view for the website, and then use the web view's loadUrl() method to open the page in the web view. Be careful not to use Intent.ACTION_VIEW, as this will present the user with a WebView chooser dialog. To download a resource from a website, you can use the resource's URL, as you are currently doing. See for more information. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image-sensing device, a light quantity adjusting method and an image-forming apparatus. 2. Related Background Art When exposing a silver halide photographic paper using a silver halide photographic photosensitive material, each of the silver halide photographic photosensitive material and the silver halide photographic paper (image-forming material) has an influence on each other (so-called sensitivity, gradation, color response, and the like are modified), so that a proper exposure amount must be determined for each photosensitive material, in the case of exposing a silver halide photographic paper using a silver halide photographic photosensitive material as an object, the exposure amount is adjusted to a proper value using an image-sensing device. On the other hand, a color paper is generally handled during development and printing process, and a photographic printer of the type wherein a color photographic paper is once exposed to an image-sensing device for a plurality of colors, is distributed to a customer and a developing processing is performed in a laboratory, and is then delivered to a customer to have prints (prints obtained in a laboratory) is on the market. As such a color photographic paper, there is mainly used a color photographic paper having a small size of size such as a mini-lateral-size color photographic paper, and, to be specific, although various kinds of mini-lateral-size color photographic paper having the same size of width and length are on the market, the mini-lateral-size color photographic paper has not satisfied the recent demand for a high image quality in recent years. Thus, as disclosed in the U.S. Pat. No. 3,697,275,

Two glycoproteins with differing carbohydrate content and molecular weights of 21,000 and 29,000 were isolated from the red seaweed blastoclad, Blastocycladiella emersonii. Their composition was studied in comparison to that of chlorophyll a. The compounds were purified by sequential extraction with cholate-5% dimethyl sulfoxide, anionic exchange chromatography on DEAE-cellulose and DEAE-Sephrose, and high-performance liquid chromatography gel filtration on Superose 12. The obtained glycoproteins were fractionated on a Dowex 50 X 8 X 8 resin column to isolate and isolate the glycoproteins, respectively. The chromatography data suggested that glycoconjugates with the same carbohydrate composition differ in molecular weight. basic_stream_socket::basic_stream_socket (1 of 3 overloads)
