Chondro-osseous dysplasia (COD) is an extremely rare disorder with unknown actiology. Approximately two thirds of cases are female, and mutations in the FANCA gene have been identified in 6 families. To assess the frequency of FANCA mutation in a cohort of patients with COD and to correlate this with clinical phenotype. Cases with a diagnosis of COD were collected from a multidisciplinary database. All cases had a molecular genetic analysis of the FANCA gene. Thirty-eight patients with a diagnosis of COD were identified and the FANCA analysis was positive in 27/38 (71%). The COD phenotype was predominantly periarticular without joint deformity in 18/27. The presence of mutations correlated with a short stature (p = 0.005). In the absence of hematopoietic malignancies in the history of these patients, the phenotype of COD does not appear to be related to the presence of an acquired bone marrow disorder.Q: How to get the Home URL in my App by Add Android Studio Activity Class?
