Some have reported the change to reset VIN in version 3.7. Time required Due to that, the time required to develop the software is slow. There is no progress report to show the progress of the development. Why I made this title? Well, this is the first product in Windows Phone that I released (Windows Phone only). I released it because it's so cool to use and because the product is light-weight. I don't expect to see any report here though I made it simply because I'm interested in such things. (I could not find an official report of the development progress to show what happened and I found no tool for such a thing to show the development progress so I did it.) I also used such title because I have no name for any such thing. Development progress report Well, as I promised, I'm going to show the development progress of Vertical Mapper. Here is the complete list of what we already have in the project and what we are working on now: Full list You can download it from this link So what's new? Version 3.7 Developed by Atsya Since version 3.6, there was an error of infinity for VIN caused by bug of the compiler. Version 3.7 is released now. Bug fix Added an option for checking whether there is an internal error. If there is an error, we will show the error message on the log window. Note that this option is useful only if you have Visual Studio Ultimate or higher. Bug fix If you try to reset VIN every time with natural neighbour method, the calculation of the distance between lines is different and the calculation of the attribute value is also different. The resolution of these problems is still a work in progress. Note Regarding the development process of VIN and the tool to calculate the distance between lines, we could not find that the last version used by ourselves and the official version differs. The record

Vertical Mapper 3.7. .Denmark has reportedly shut down a cryptocurrency mining operation that was growing and costing the country $60 million per year in lost tax revenue. According to Danish finance minister Anders Samuelsen, the country's police have raided a large facility in southeastern Jutland and seized around 20,000 electronic devices with mining capability, a quantity large enough that they could indeed account for nearly $60 million in revenue, the government-backed daily Politiken reported on Thursday. Samuelsen said in a statement: "We have to close down this business, where we found around 20,000 devices, which were turning our batteries into energy. There's a shortage of energy, so the government decided to close down the operation." A representative for mining giant Bitmain said the company would work with the government "to find a longer term solution" for the energy shortage that came about as a result of Denmark's crackdown. Samuelsen said that some mining firms had promised to renegotiate the country's tax laws to avoid such government action in the future, and that he would be calling them to ask for just that. "If they say they're not going to do it then they can pay for it themselves, they can pay for it better than the state does," he said. Jutland is one of the areas of Denmark with the highest electricity costs and a large base of renewable energy. Heating and electricity prices have been rising this winter, particularly in Jutland, which is home to most of the mining activities in Denmark. Some experts believe that taxes on cryptocurrency mining could be replaced by a general carbon tax, which currently makes up roughly 30% of
