John B. Tindall John B. Tindall (born December 16, 1842 - died October 20, 1903) was an Irish-born pioneer and political figure in British Columbia. He represented Fort George in the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia from 1894 to 1900. He was born in County Monaghan, the son of John Tindall and his wife Margaret, and was educated there and in Canada East. Tindall came to New Westminster in 1865 and was first superintendent of the mint there. Tindall worked as an accountant, first for the Royal Bank of Canada and then as commissioner for the Hudson's Bay Company. He served as president of the school board and on the municipal council. Tindall farmed in New Westminster, and also operated a general store and lumber business. Tindall was elected to the assembly in an 1894 by-election held after Thomas Francis Meighan was named to the federal cabinet. He died in Fort George later that year. What's New In?

This invention relates to a method of recording a digital television signal on an optical disk or the like, and more particularly to a method of recording a digital television signal on a disk which is divided into a plurality of sectors. It has been known to record a television signal as well as a digital audio signal onto a recording medium such as a disk for transmission through a cable or the like. The digital audio signal can be coupled to the television signal prior to the recording or coupled to the television signal during the recording. The audio signal is frequently recorded at the back of the television program and can be reproduced from the back of the program using an audio player. In most cases the digital audio signal is represented as a time-base compressed signal such as the Moving Picture Experts Group-2 (MPEG-2) signal. It has also been known to record several television channels together with data, each having an information amount per second, for each channel. For example, a high-definition television (HDTV) signal has the amount of information per second equal to the amount of information per second of a standard definition television (SDTV) signal. In addition, multiple channels of standard definition television (SDTV) signals have been combined to form one channel of high definition television (HDTV) signal. At the point when the standard definition television signal is to be converted into a high definition television (HDTV) signal, an interpolation process is applied to data in each field. A technique for recording and/or reproducing the high definition television (HDTV) signal is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,237,365, which is incorporated herein by reference. In the process of converting a signal having a given frequency band into a signal of a higher frequency band, the number of samples per second needed in the higher frequency band is larger than that of the lower frequency band. Therefore, if the number of samples per second is not sufficient, a conventional conversion technique is to discard samples as indicated in U.S. Pat. No. 4,375,637, which is incorporated herein by reference. This, however, leaves vacant areas in the digital data, which might degrade the sound quality. For example, speech might be difficult to recognize. As a result, a technique for expanding a data band is needed to solve this problem. In the case of the multichannel signal, a technique for expanding the data band, the number of channels, and the number of frames is needed to increase the number
