The most significant change was that AutoCAD 2018 is available in desktop only, not in a cloud, license model as in previous versions. This change is in direct conflict with the way in which AutoCAD is used in most industries, with the vast majority of users working on AutoCAD in a desktop application. The 2018 release included some other features not found in the 2017 release, as well as many enhancements to the product. These were summarized on the Autodesk Blog. 2017 CAD Changes In May 2016, Autodesk announced plans to discontinue the AutoCAD 2013 and 2014 subscription options and move to a new license model based on 3D. With this new model, the monthly subscription price of AutoCAD 2013 and 2014 will become $47 USD for the single-user license, with a price of $100 USD per user after three licenses. Autodesk said that this move was driven by the revenue opportunities that the new license model creates. Autodesk customers had the option of purchasing a perpetual license with a discounted price of $495 USD, or a yearly subscription, which was discounted to $119 USD for the first year and $69 USD for each year thereafter. The transition to this new license model was in progress at the time of this writing. Since AutoCAD 2013 and 2014 are no longer supported, there are no more Autodesk versions of AutoCAD on the market, but users are still able to obtain a perpetual license that can be used indefinitely.
