How to Fight Fatigued Mind We sometimes encounter what is called “fatigued mind”, which is typically found in those who have overindulged in alcohol or psychoactive drugs. This condition is described as, “A mind clouded with distress or worry, or a mind tormented by dissatisfaction, anxiety, worry, agitation, anger and fear.” The term is taken from Shiho Nisenso’s Abhidharma Psychology of the Middle Way, which is the most influential book on Buddhist psychology today. Even when living a more ‘normal’ life, the condition of fatigued mind may creep in sometimes. For example, it can happen when you’re having a bad day, or when you’re stuck in traffic. We may feel stressed out, worried, angry, and so on. Yet we still have some spare energy to cope with that. But when we’re more fatigued than usual, it’s hard to get that energy back. When our ‘normal’ state is one of fatigue or tension, it makes us prone to feel worse and contribute to our own depression. You will be unable to do your best at your work. You’ll feel like giving up when trying to do something. You might have trouble concentrating. By taking a correct diagnosis, we can see that the root of this condition is imbalance
