While the first installment of the drama premiered two years ago, this season marks the first time that fans will be able to stream the entire season online. All the couples that were featured in the first season will be coming back for a new season, and fans have been anxiously awaiting the arrival of this exciting new season. In fact, fans will be able to stream We Got Married: Here Comes the Bride, which is the sequel of the first season of the popular show, starting on May 20. According to the drama's official website, more than 400 girls and about 600 boys are confirmed to be featured in the first season of the second installment. Fans were naturally disappointed by the fact that only about two-thirds of the couples featured in the first season will be featured in the second season of the drama. While it is true that many of the first season's featured couples will be returning in the second season, fans will have to be pleasantly surprised by the fact that some new couples are also being featured in the upcoming season. Fans are also excited to learn that dynamic couple, Yoo Jae Suk and Kim Jong Kook will also be returning for the second installment of the drama. The two have been the center of attention since the first season of the drama, and it is safe to say that they have been the most loved members of the cast. While fans are excited to meet the returning couples, they will also be excited to meet some new couples in the upcoming season. According to reports, about 70 percent of all the couples featured in the first season of the drama were excited to come back for the new season. "Because I was curious whether the fans would watch it, I have been waiting for this," said Park Seo Joon, who plays the character of Cha Chi Soo. Fans of the drama will also be able to watch We Got Married 2: Here Comes the Bride live on their favorite streaming platforms like Netflix, Viki, and JTBC. The second season of Consciously Loaded Nuggets: Why I Actually Love Pumpkin It's literally the time of year for that middle of the pumpkin patch pic in your Facebook timeline. It's the time of year for pumpkin flavor infiltrating every possible aspect of our lives - from pastry to beer, from fashion to food...and even the workplace. We love the way pumpkin smells, taste, looks and feels - and we love the way that it's slowly embracing fall. The same can be said for our bodies. We love pumpkin because it's a source of carbohydrates (about 6 grams per cup), vitamin A, vitamin C, potassium, and also a little fiber and iron. But, we like it for a few more reasons: Pumpkin contains antioxidants that benefit cardiovascular health, help to reduce cancer risk, boost immune function, and improve metabolism. Pumpkin has beta-carotene, which is a potent precursor to vitamin A. Pumpkin contains trypsin inhibitors, which are anti-inflammatory compounds that also help to reduce the formation of blood clots in the heart and brain. Pumpkin helps to relieve digestion, promote sleep, and alleviate gas and discomfort. In fact, we find that pumpkin contains more than 1,000 compounds that may improve our health. I love cooking with pumpkin. It takes on the flavor of whatever you use it in and it blends with just about anything you add it to. It doesn't need to be baked, because if you simmer it - you get the deep, savory, thick-sliced flavor of a good soup or stew. It also takes on the flavor of anything you add it to...can you imagine what spices and other foods you could add? Fibers are great to help with constipation (!) and can help you stay regular. Pumpkin also helps to decrease excess weight gain and lower cholesterol. It is said to aid in liver health. And, just think how grateful your liver must be after you've gorged on some of the pumpkin goodness! Nutritionhacker.com reports that pumpkin 6d1f23a050
