CAD.2015.v15.0.3.1574.Q: What does a "module" in C++ Builder's TRADVANCED mean? What does a TRADVANCED in C++ Builder mean? How do you create one? A: It's a version of the C++Builder compiler that no longer supports the "old" way of doing things. Such as what is done in the C++Builder 6.x series of versions, where you had to define classes in this way: class MyClass { ... }; instead of this: class MyClass : public TRIObject { ... } Similarly, in C++Builder 7.x you needed to write these declarations: MMyClass MMyOtherClass ... instead of this: TMyClass = class(TRIObject); TMyOtherClass = class(TRIObject); ... Plus, you were not allowed to use struct or namespace directives in your code, even with the use_declarations=y directive in your csproj file. (Even when you don't care about what type your class is in, since you can't create the inheritance relationship. When in doubt, you should avoid using namespaces and make the declarations explicit.) Similarly, the Toolhelp and for Form objects of the type became obsolete. Answering your question, here is an excerpt from a C++Builder 7 SDK demo: // The following two lines of code instantiate a class called // "MyClass" which is derived from TRIObject. TRIObject* pSomeObject = new MyClass; TRI
