Loftek NCSÂ .A group of teenage girls who wanted to take a selfie together were forced to walk to the car park in their pyjamas. Alexandria Ingham, 18, had taken her friends Mary Walzak, 18, and Abigail Benamar, 16, and their friends Carla Speranza and Carly Wells, to the National Museum of Scotland in Edinburgh to go on the Tour of Britain on Saturday afternoon. The family were having a great day out when a friend's phone rang. It was Ms Walzak's mother, who told them she could no longer drive her daughter and her friends to a shuttle pick-up point from their hotel because they were not dressed appropriately for taking selfies. The girls had been dressing in characters for their selfie, including one in black and white stripes, along with a baby. However, the museum's staff said they were not allowed to take a group photo unless everyone agreed to pose in the "official" image. Ms Ingham told The Scotsman: "Mary's mum got a phone call from work. I think it was to her boss, and she said: 'There's a problem.' "She's the one who told us." The group, who were on a tour of Scotland's history, had to turn back and walk through the museum in their pajamas and hand-held shower caps to the car park, before they booked a taxi. Ms Ingham, from Fife, said: "There was a bit of a scene. We couldn't believe it. "My mum's mum, who's from Fife, was with us. She said: 'It's not right, it's not fair. They're all your age.' "I don't think it's right. It's just so bad. "At the end, Mary's mum said: 'Please c6a93da74d
