as cyber security advances to protect us against these threats, cyber criminals modify their tactics, becoming more wily. most email providers offer a spam filter, which sorts out a large bulk of threatening emails, but vigilance is still important because even the best filters cant eliminate everything. never click on an attachment unless you know for a fact that it is from a trusted source and that your antivirus software is up-to-date and able to scan all attachments before allowing them to be opened. the numbers game is even more interesting, as crypto systems have gotten better and better we find more and more weaknesses in these systems. ive looked at literally thousands of designs now, and there seems to be no end. as the problems get fixed, the new ones appear. when you have a good crypto system, which is a big if, it is hard to see anything else really standing out, which means anything that hasnt been already cracked. the question is are you better with 10 systems or 1 that is up to date? im not sure that i know the answer, at least not one that is proven. the other point is theres a lot of technology out there that could be used to crack stuff. like the paper they used for the server, or even the server itself. it was designed to be pretty much immune to analysis, including the mathematical ciphers, so its not that much of a challenge for someone that knows what they are doing. one of the biggest factors in the number of account compromises is how much you trust your employees. it is no secret that some employees are lazy and have no qualms about handing over confidential information such as emails, passwords, bank account numbers and more. it has also been reported that some employees are so uninformed about technology that they believe there is nothing wrong with sending emails from their work devices. in cases of phishing scams, more often than not, employees fall for the quick and easy way out of providing confidential information. so, how do you stop it? start by educating your employees. explain what phishing is and what it can do. train them to recognize potentially dangerous messages. if they do end up accidentally sending an email from their work device, know that it can be quickly blocked by your anti-virus software.

remember, it is not that these hackers are physically in your computer. they are virtually in your computer because your computer is on all the time. you need to make sure that you have installed your anti-virus and anti-malware software on your computer and make sure that it is updated so that you can protect yourself as well as you can. it is important to understand how the encryption works and how that affects your way of thinking. for example, when you are traveling and your system demands that you make a call, it will automatically connect you to a cell tower. a lot of organizations (both government and non government) have used these techniques to track employees and monitor them while in areas where they should not be. tracking a cell signal is not something you want to purposely seek out but that is what will happen if you are not careful. if it is the government tracking them, they are not doing it for naughty reasons but for prevention of the help of terrorist groups such as isil or al qaeda. the same thing works out for the likes of tripwire , hacking team or proofpoint . smart card tags are very useful for things like toll roads, allowing people to pay for road time by merely waving their card in front of a reader. however, the more technological approach has become more popular. point of sale systems that require a smart card to get through the front door can be found in most larger businesses and even smaller shops. these systems are very reliable and have all the bells and whistles a business could need when it comes to card payment systems. card-based systems can be integrated to a point where their function is embedded into a web browser, and they are just as easy to add to or remove from a system as any other plug-in. 5ec8ef588b
