q: what happened to my question? a question popped up on my profile today that i was wondering what happened to. it said: "this question has been removed by a moderator and is no longer visible." i'm not even sure what questions this refers to as there was a whole bunch that were deleted and my profile was sort of redone. a: it was migrated to meta.stackoverflow.com and then closed as a duplicate of this question. [orthotopic liver transplantation for the treatment of familial amyloid polyneuropathy]. familial amyloid polyneuropathy (fap) is a hereditary systemic disorder characterized by progressive accumulation of amyloid fibrils in peripheral and autonomic nerves and other tissues. in some cases, the progression of the disease leads to cardiorespiratory failure. orthotopic liver transplantation was performed in a 56-year-old man, with a 15-year history of the disease, who was in a state of cardiorespiratory failure. the liver was transplanted into the donor's left abdomen. the postoperative course was uneventful. at the end of the first year after the operation, the patient was discharged from the hospital and has been doing well for more than four years. however, signs of the disease have been demonstrated in his brother and

geometry in early chronic kidney disease. it has been reported that early chronic kidney disease (ckd) may be associated with left ventricular (lv) hypertrophy. we studied prospectively 87 patients with ckd stages 1 to 3 (51 patients with diabetes mellitus and 36 without diabetes) and 27 age-matched healthy subjects by cardiac magnetic resonance imaging to determine whether these patients have changes in lv geometry, particularly eccentric hypertrophy. we found eccentric lv hypertrophy in 15 of 51 patients (28.3%) with diabetes and in 5 of 36 patients (13.9%) without diabetes (p = 0.068).
