Guy Cihri also felt that the directors of the video games did not appreciate Silent Hill 2 as much as the developers that created the original game. "The humor and pace of Silent Hill 2 are great and I think it is one of the most creative games made in the past years. Making the film was a very good chance for me to get recognition and also to remind people that Silent Hill is a wonderful, creative and awesome game. Many of the people who worked on it are creative artists, not just gamers. They have their feet in both worlds and that's why Silent Hill 2 is brilliant." Mary Elizabeth McGlynn was one of the first directors to offer her services to Konami and was part of the initial team for Silent Hill 2, although the Dark Half, the character who shares the same name as the director's father, was not a part of it. It was decided early on that the development staff should actually be given the opportunity to create something that the fans themselves wanted. Horgan and Baker, as the lead stars of the game, were closely involved in the making of Silent Hill 2's final audio playthrough. Horgan stated that they were instrumental in recording her lines in the new audio with Guy. Horgan had encouraged Guy to keep to the original lines, especially for James, as they were integral to the character of James. Horgan was also aware of Guy's letter to Konami and had initially thought that this would be an additional reason for Guy to want to maintain the lines, as Guy was receiving small payments for each re-release. Baker agreed and was given permission to record any new lines, provided that they were variations on "over time". The original audio was edited out and the only audio remixed in the English language version was the opening theme. Horgan never heard the re-recorded version of James's voice. Thessaly was also consulted when Baker felt that James's voice needed to be re-recorded. Baker also said that he recorded a line for Mary Ann's ending dialogue, but decided not to use it in the re-recorded version. Horgan stated that, although she recorded lines for Mary Ann, this was done as a favor to Guy. Mary Ann's line was included in the Japanese version, while it was not included in the international version.
