Site: A disused construction pipe in a corner of the refinery area that should have been entirely sealed turned out to have thin cracks in its concrete cover. During the heavy rainfall, some water seeped through the cracks in the disused pipe to the other side of the refinery area fence. A disused construction pipe in a corner of the refinery area that should have been entirely sealed turned out to have thin cracks in its concrete cover. During the heavy rainfall, some water seeped through the cracks in the disused pipe to the other side of the refinery area fence. The design won the grand prize at the annual Korea Additive Manufacturing User Group (KAMUG) DfAM Competition, which celebrates 3D printing and manufacturing convergence cases and commercialization. The team used Ansys Additive Prep to design the hood hinge with topology optimization and Ansys Additive Print to predict recoater crash, crack and deformation problems. They built a metal hood hinge after verifying and checking the external shape and internal overhang area via computed tomography (CT) scans. Whenever the water that has seeped through the cracks in the disused pipe is pumped out, the internal
