usually, the easiest way to get to this part of the window is to hit the open menu button, just above the editing window, to open the insert/new menu, then choose window, and the menu will change to edit/new window. alternatively, you can click the little + symbol at the top of the editing window to have a new editing window appear. however, if you have both the equation on the clipboard and the equation in the editing window open, you can cut or copy the equation you are currently editing into the other window by double-clicking it. in the new window, you can edit it. mathtype 7 automatically adds to the clipboard, by default, the contents of the current editing window. you can control what mathtype puts on the clipboard with this menu. at the top of the menu section, click the edit button to open the menu. then click the first arrow in the cut and copy sub-sections to change the order in which mathtype puts stuff on the clipboard. this is almost certainly what you don't want. still, mathtype translating process isn't sophisticated enough to scan the expressions on both sides of the comma (or whatever separator your region uses). as another example, mathtype won't be able to discern whether 10,205 is the number ten thousand, two hundred and five or the ordered pair representing x/y coordinates of 10 on the x-axis and 205 on the y-axis.

(if you paste something into the other window, you will see the second window's contents in the first one.) you can also have one editing window for the equation on the clipboard and a second one for the equation that has just been cut or copied into the clipboard. a mathtype window with two editing windows open will have a second window to the right of the first. that second window will have a three-dot menu bar at the top of the page. 5ec8ef588b
