I want to prevent SSH on my server so that I can see what's happening on the console. I have it setup so that I can login with my admin account and see the activity of the server. What can I do to ensure that there is no other way for SSHing into my server? A: Use SSH-authentication OpenSSH has a mechanism for restricting what IP addresses can SSH to the system, called the PermitRootLogin option. This allows you to limit access to the system to trusted IP addresses and/or IP ranges. To disable root login, run the following command: PermitRootLogin no You can also enable more advanced security by disabling password authentication, using the following command: PermitEmptyPasswords no If you don't want to use a password for authentication at all, use this command: PermitEmptyPasswords yes The permit_users option permits the user login account to use public key authentication and the no_password option disables password authentication. Source A: You can configure sshd to listen only on localhost, but that 2edc1e01e8
