... or give the KeyMacro a try to see what it's all about! Paint.NET contains a handful of very useful Image Filters. In this series of posts, I'll explain the Image Filter options. In the first post, I'll go over the general image filter options and discuss the different filters and how they work. In the second post, I'll explain the options in the Screen: section. This is a tutorial on how to convert a Windows Classic menu to a Windows 95 Classic menu using a free tool called Virtual 7+8. This is the English version of a French tutorial, which I've translated for myself. Aaaand we're back. As my subject I take some good old fashioned pictures for this week's edition of #ReadMore. There are a lot of awesome pictures in the featured image, they've been labelled so all you have to do is click the link. The coolest thing about this Firefox Add-On is that you can turn it on when you're sitting in a web page, and have it automatically open whenever a'related' page is opened in a new tab. This can be a great timesaver, and it's a really nice feature. Here is a neat Firefox Add-on that gives you a history of the web pages that you've bookmarked. It's an extension that you can easily turn on when you're using Firefox, and you can tell it to go into 'history mode' so that it displays bookmarks in chronological order. By John Fisher A version of this post originally appeared on John's blog, Taking Note. Blogs are incredibly important. They provide a big sandbox where we're all free to say and write and think and explore and learn. Yesterday I posted a picture of this strange-looking marble. I started writing about why I was so excited about this marble and suddenly realized that this marble is actually a feather. A Feather is a hair-like growth that grows from an animal's skin. Most feathers are at least a little bit stiff, and all feathers have a large tip that gives the feather an aerodynamic shape. This feather is made of just one sheet of cardboard, and it's a perfect scale model of the interior of the human ear. I bought this feather from a weird place, and a very weird person. But he was a very nice guy. He only charged me five bucks for it. I also wanted to give the 2edc1e01e8
