Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of controlling a yarn take-up speed in a yarn-take-up assembly in a textile machine, said assembly comprising at least two yarn-guiding members and a yarn-take-up shaft arranged to be driven in a rotating manner in relation to a drive shaft of the textile machine.

2. The Prior Art In known textile machines, a yarn-take-up assembly is provided at a predetermined position in relation to a drive shaft for the yarn-take-up assembly, which drive shaft is arranged to be driven in a rotating manner in relation to a drive shaft of the textile machine. In the yarn-take-up assembly, the yarn-take-up shaft is arranged to be driven by a gear-type speed reduction drive. In such a yarn-take-up assembly, it is known to influence the yarn-take-up speed by a manual control element for adjusting the rotation speed of the yarn-take-up shaft in relation to the rotation speed of the drive shaft. The yarn-take-up speed is usually set at a certain value by means of a manual control element. It has been shown that the yarn-take-up speed cannot be adjusted rapidly enough when a yarn breakage occurs. Therefore, an increase of the yarn-take-up speed in order to be able to continue the operation of the textile machine is limited, which means that the operation of the textile machine has to be interrupted for some time when a yarn breakage occurs. Such an interruption of the operation of the textile machine means that the manufacturer of the textile machine has to be prepared for corresponding arrangements of the product.
