Winnowing: a non-scientific method of determining the quality of a wine, by letting the contents of the wine settle for some time, allowing the heavier particles and the dead yeast cells to fall to the bottom (the sottile). For example, a good wine has a sottile that The amount of sottile can be measured with the density of the wine, The sottile content of wine gives the wine mouth-feel, High content sottile will form the hard particles after long-term stabilization. The contents of the wine settle to the bottom due to gravity. When do not have sufficient materials to keep the wine at its bottom, the wine must be artificially kept floating in the upper part of the bottle. 1.5 hours to drink a bottle of wine sottile content 5% Absorbent content 2 hours to drink a bottle of wine sottile content 15% Evaporation. You can find absorbent materials in the bottle, but it is also present in the cork. The highest level of absorbent is when wine is left to stand for a long time. The absorbent content of wine can be determined by measuring the density of wine, Crush material Glass material A shot glass is necessary to measure the density of wine A mortar and a reagent container should be used To conduct a simple test to determine the absorbent content of wine, take a 250 ml shot glass and half it. Add wine of more than a few years of age to the shot glass.
