Annoying cold? Mind your head Intolerable cold or burning colds are often aggravated by pressure on the head. Some people's heads feel blocked by physical and emotional tensions. For example, patients with muscular tension headaches often have complaints about hot or burning heads. There are also many people who feel that the head has a common cold when there is no external cause for such discomfort. If you suspect that your head is blocked by tension, try the following relaxation technique. This will help you to stop tensing the muscles and providing energy to your headache, and will ease your blocked head. 1. Place the tip of your right index finger at the front part of your forehead. Press this point as hard as you can, but without pinching, into the bone. You can press it up to your eyebrow or into your eyebrows. Do this for 10 minutes. This point on your forehead and your eyebrows is a meridian point, which is also called trigone. It is where many of the acupressure points are. 2. Relax your head and neck muscles. This will help your head block to release. 3. Then take a deep breath and exhale slowly. This will release the tension in your head. You may feel relieved from the pressure. 4. Repeat this procedure by pressing your finger into your forehead, and then relax, breathing deeply and exhaling slowly. This technique should be repeated every morning and night before going to sleep. If you are a breastfeeding mother, consider drinking a warm cup of black or green tea, or adding a teaspoon of rice or skim milk powder to water or herbal tea before drinking. Rice can be substituted for other foods like bread or pastries, as long as it has not been heavily processed. Proteomic analysis of RBOH-dependent regulation of reactive oxygen species
