Ask any photo editor straight out of school, and he'll claim there's one tool that's crucial and cannot be replaced by another. The best tools in the world don't come close to Adobe Camera Raw. If you've never used a RAW file, you absolutely must try it. It's a blessing to have such a superior advantage. This is also true for Photoshop. A good Photoshop project makes a great print; nothing else even comes close. The only way to compete with such superior tools is to learn it. I've been using Photoshop for ten years, and when I switched to this new System, I started to get frustrated. Lightroom still has not gotten a touch-friendly experience, as Touch Preview allows for zoom and navigation within the image. Of course, you cannot actually edit anything in a photo because it would be bad to accidentally touch an important area of the photo while trying to play around with the keyboard. However, that is the trade-off.
